

Everyday Life RPG Systems Document

This document is a human-readable companion to the structured JSON dataset. It separates low-level actions from long-term motives so the same material can support AI parsing, simulation logic, content design, quest writing, UI filtering, and balancing work. [cite:1] [cite:3] [cite:5] [cite:21] [cite:29]

Overview

The dataset contains 350 actions across 11 categories and 50 motives. It uses a flat object structure with predictable keys because schema-like JSON patterns are easier for machines and tools to read consistently. [cite:21]

Numeric fields

- `energy_delta`: Positive replenishes energy, negative spends it. [cite:1] [cite:3]
- `stress_delta`: Negative calms the character, positive increases pressure. [cite:5]
- `money_delta`: Positive gains money, negative spends it. [cite:8]
- `social_delta`: Measures relationship movement or social fulfillment. [cite:8] [cite:29]
- `health_delta`: Measures physical wellbeing support. [cite:5]
- `hygiene_delta`: Measures cleanliness and self-care impact. [cite:1] [cite:3]
- `fun_delta`: Measures play, enjoyment, novelty, or relief. [cite:5]
- `discipline_delta`: Measures routine strength and habit-building value. [cite:3] [cite:5]

Design use

A single action can contribute to several motives at once, which helps an everyday-life RPG feel more believable than a one-stat-per-action model. Routine tasks often support comfort, stability, order, and preparedness simultaneously, while social or leisure actions often shape belonging, identity, meaning, and balance at the same time. [cite:1][cite:5][cite:29]

- `cook_dinner` can support survival, health, comfort, preparedness, and homebuilding while also spending time and money. [cite:1][cite:7]
- `text_friend` can raise belonging, friendship, or love depending on the target relationship. [cite:1][cite:8]
- `check_bank_balance` and `set_budget` can support security, stability, preparedness, and independence. [cite:8][cite:26]
